THE MUTUEL AND BLOCK SYSTEMS.

There isn't any chance of the Ohio-Kentucky tracks going to the mutual system this year. Oakley and Latonia sent Mr. Chas. F. McLean to Europe to see and report on betting systems. He declares against the mutual plan and in favor of the block system—a novelty here and not available for use under a year.

In the block system each betting booth is supplied with two pretty good sized boards—one for straight betting and one for place. These boards are fixed to uprights or against a wall and are provided with a requisite number of clips or clamps for holding tickets. Above the clips are large numbers, corresponding to the numbers of the horses on the program. The whole affair resembles in a degree the room key-board of a country hotel, only, of course, it is larger.

Now the tickets. These are printed and bound in pads of 100 each, and numbered from 0 to 99, both inclusive. The number on the face of each ticket is larger than the figures on an ordinary desk calendar, and when a pad of them is fastened under the clip on the board the number sold on each horse can be read as easily as the names of the horses on the bookmaker's slate. As the tickets are taken from the block the number exposed indicates the total number of tickets sold on each horse. For instance, when ticket No. 0 is torn off it exposes No. 1, and one ticket has been sold; when No. 53 has been torn off the figures shown, 54, tell how many tickets have been disposed of. Beneath ticket No. 99 there is a sheet of paper, with 100 in large numerals. This is posted alongside the clip, and a new pad, commencing with No. 0, is placed under the clip, and when ten tickets from the second pad have been sold a glance reveals the fact that 110 tickets have been sold.

The value of the winning tickets are computed as are Paris mutuels—a pro rata division of the total amount bet on all horses in the race, less 5 per cent. to holders of tickets on the winner, and a like pro rata distribution of all the money bet for the place.

At the close of each betting the men in charge at each booth make a report to a general supervisor of the betting, and this functionary makes a report of the race to the association. No tickets can be sold after the start, for when the field is dispatched a bell is rung from the judges' stand and a heavy wire screen is at the same time thrown over the boards, locking automatically. Speculators can then see the number of tickets sold on each horse, and can, by a simple mathematical calculation, compute the value of winning pasteboards. Only, of course, this would preclude watching the race, and after the race those with losing tickets do not care what their value would have been under other circumstances, and winners will be eager to get in line to cash. But the plan is a safe one—one which it will be well nigh impossible to beat, so many checks are there. In France the tickets may be cashed any time within seven days, and no matter how elaborate the ticket, they are sometimes counterfeited. But the chances of presenting, say Ticket No. 33, after the holder of it has cashed, minimizes attempts at fraud.

Mr. McLean did not say so, but even in France, the home of mutual betting, the bulk of the money and all of the big wagers are handled by bookmakers. Handbook men are fixtures in the corridors of the hotels and all prominent places in the city at all times, and are at the race tracks during the day, taking money all the time on the various events of the day, and these are not "close proposition" bookmakers, either. They take bets of 25,000 francs without a shudder and enjoy the patronage of all the plungers and wealthy bettors.
